Project Description

Fort Pulaski National Monument is located near Savannah, Georgia. The park has a rich cultural and environmental history that is yearning to be explored. From the American Civil War to hurricanes, saltwater marshes to lighthouse, we interpret a wide variety of topics of great interest. We are looking for interns interested in learning about the park on-line and taking that knowledge and experience to help us reach a broader digital audience. In a world cluttered with information we want to refine and expand our story to make it more accessible to the varying interests of the digital visitor.

-Interns will review Fort Pulaski's website for relevant content.

-Based upon the website review, interns will research topics and events related to Fort Pulaski National Monument and write articles (500 to 1000 words) that will be published on the park's website or turned into social media posts.

-Topics might include; ecosystems in the monument, vegetation, birds, mammals, reptiles and amphibians, hurricanes, sea-level rise, colonial Savannah, slavery, the American Civil War, fortifications, lighthouses, and much more.

-Interns will work independently to gather information from government documents, primary source material, agency reports, and interviews with current park staff. This information will need to be refined into clear and well written text.

-Interns will help develop a timeline calendar to be used by the social media team to create appropriate social media posts based on cultural and environmental ties to the monument.

Additional Information

Fort Pulaski National Monument is originally established to interpret the history of Fort Pulaski, a nineteenth century masonry fortification built to defend Savannah, Georgia. We deal with a number of cultural topics ranging from slavery to the New Deal. The park was enlarged with the addition of over 5000 acres of saltwater marsh which makes up a large proportion of the local coastal ecosystem. The park has been adjusting it's interpretation and education offerings to better balance the wide variety of topics available to the visiting public.
